Beautiful Little City of The Mountains a Place of Rare Interest And Charm. Handsome Homes and Delightful People Make up The Capital of Bell County.

MIDDLESBORO A HEALTHY RIVAL

nestled down between the Cumberland mountains of Kentucky a wonderful little city has stretched herself out, angle in shape and beautiful in build. Pineville is her name. Capital of Bell County, a great mining resources and a delightful people are three points of her charm, besides these Pineville has means to attract a visitor, prospector or wanderer.

business way. Pineville is most alive. She has every convenience stores, three banks and the department store, would be any third class city. Bell County courthouse stands in the center business section and is crowded with lawyers. Electric lights, water-works are two of the town's assets and the magnificent school speaks well for her educational progress. The Pineville Hotel is a story brick building and enjoys a patronage which is due to Mr. and Mrs. Wickliffe. On both sides butter everybody's bread and they can't stay away from their homes.

The Pineville Sun that shines for every Friday morning. Miss Lena Rolfe is the power behind the press in the newspaper office and to her a portion of credit is given for the making of this splendid little paper. Residences in Pineville are lovely, one of the sweetest places is that of Mrs. George Reece. Their ideal, and little Miss Genevieve George Reece, Jr., are the life of the town. When they are not driving in their car, they are making things pleasurable for their little neighbor, "Emmy Mae," and others on the block. The principal attraction of Pineville is the people. While all of them are not mountain mountaineers, each one is in line with every path from the Narrows to West Pineville. "I couldn't leave the mountains now," said Mr. W. Darnaby, a former Lexington man, and he expressed the sentiments of whole Pineville.

Mr. Jim Satterfield was one of the most men at the coal mines. He was most anxious to hear about his home and inquired about many. In the shadow of "The Lonesome Pine" lives the mountains' fortune-teller. For any small coin that you are willing to drop in her pitcher, she will give you a peep into your future. Pineville's guests all go to her to get a peep of the things to be and her little riches are quite pleasing. There is much to tell about Pineville, her concrete pavements to her mountain tops, she is glorious and one can talk and talk and write forever of this nest in the giant hills. No goes there who does not want to see the feet in the Cumberland river, for this is done, your return to Pineville, said, is certain.

Friday morning a congenial party of Pineville folks started for a ten miles journey across the mountains from Middlesboro to Harrogate, Tenn. The trip was not only interesting but exciting. Going down the mountain above Cumberland Gap, the horses were into a run and the danger did not ease until the wagon was dashed at the railroad where little June, the daughter of "The Trail of The Lonesome Pine," first boarded a train.

After a visit to the well-known Lincoln Memorial Institute, the party returned to Middlesboro where they were entertained at the elegant hotel. Among the guests there was Mr. Cromwell, a former Breckenridge man. Her son, Chas. Dean Cromwell, and her charming daughter, Manda Cromwell, were there with her for the first time. After a visit to the News office, the train for Pineville was on schedule time and picked up the following: Misses Ida Moss, Mabel Osborne, Daisy and Lucy Burchfield, Mary Bingham, Louise Babbage, Messrs John Chelf, Wm. Chelf, R. L. Bowman, L. Boling, Joe Blake, Jack Metcalf, Mr. Young, Capt. Burgis, Mr. Parks, Mrs. Reece, Mr. and Mrs. Burchfield, Mr. and Mrs. Burchfield and Mrs. Brookings. With reluctance, did the Cloverport girl tell those hospitable friends goodbye.

If the transportation had been back by the way of Richmond, perhaps the departure would not have been so hard, for the two hours spent there on the way from dear old Estill were more than pleasant. Mayor Woods turned over the Key of the city to a one 2000th part of Cloverport and Mr. Murray Smith kept his machine on the go until the town had been seen. Mr. and Mrs. Harry Hills, former Cloverporters, opened wide their doors and gave the unexpected visitor a cordial welcome. Mrs. Oelze was trying to make up her mind to leave her grandchildren, Mary Dee Hills and Chas. Alfred Oelze, the fine son of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Oelze, Little Miss Julia Hills was planning to come to Cloverport.

Blue Grass and the mountains, Estill and Irvine, all so beautiful, and people so charming that dwell therein, but home! Everybody knows what that is.

LOUISE

Col. Atilla Cox

COL. ATTILLA COX DIES AT HOME IN LOUISVILLE

Was President of the Louisville, Henderson & St. Louis Railway Co., and Chairman Directors of Columbia Trust Company

MAN POSSESSED OF WONDERFUL ABILITY

Louisville, Ky., July 7.—Atilla Cox died at 10:15 o'clock this morning at his home, 1436 Third avenue, this city. Mr. Cox had been ill for several weeks and, while his condition had been considered hopeless, he had shown a little improvement recently.

The news of his death caused widespread sorrow throughout the city.

He was born in Ghent, Ky., sixty-seven years ago. When a youth he went to Warsaw, and later, with Florian, James and Luke, his brothers, went to Owenton, where they became leaders in social, commercial and political circles.

He was elected to the state senate and was prominently for Joe Blackburn when he defeated Cerro Gordo Williams and when Cleveland was elected president Joe Blackburn, mindful of his friend, had him appointed collector of internal revenue at Louisville and he removed to the metropolis in 1885.

Before leaving Owenton he had been cashier of the First National bank of that town and he soon became interested in financial institutions in Louisville. He became president of the Mechanics' Savings Bank and Trust Company, which he organized and, later, he became president of the Columbia Trust company, which he consolidated with his other company. That company prospered with him at its head.

Mr. Cox was interested in many institutions. He was a director of the Louisville Traction company and a director of the Springfield Railway and Light company, of Springfield, Ill. He was appointed receiver of the old Texas road in 1893 and reorganized it in 1896.

Forty years ago Mr. Cox was married to Miss Kate Martin, the daughter of Judge John B. Martin, a prominent politician of Owen county, and for many years county clerk. Three children were born to them, two sons, Atilla Cox, Jr., member of the law firm of Traube, Doolin & Cox, and Lieut. Cox, a lieutenant in the United States navy, and a daughter who died two years ago. Aside from his wife and two children Mr. Cox is survived by two brothers, Luke O. Cox, president of the Union National bank, and Florian Cox, paymaster of the L., H. & St. L. railroad. Mr. Cox was a member of both the
